Safety First

Heat Stress

With the arrival of the summer months comes high heat and humidity. This combination can be very dangerous to us as we work outdoors exposed to these elements. With proper precautions and awareness, we can have another safe summer, free of heat stress related illness. When temperature and humidity are both high for prolonged periods of time the body's normal ability to tolerate these conditions is reduced.

Heat exhaustion often occurs as a result of heavy sweating and dehydration in extreme heat without consuming an adequate amount of replacement fluids. Symptoms include dizziness, headache, weakness, rapid heartbeat, nausea, muscle cramps, chest pain, and labored breathing. Treatment should involve moving the person to a shady preferably air-conditioned area, not leaving them alone, lying them down on their back or side if nauseated, loosen and remove any heavy clothes (while protecting their dignity), give cool drinks of water (not ice water), apply a cool damp cloth compress to both the head, chest, and legs, if symptoms include dizziness elevating their feet, and calling 911 if the person is not better in a few minutes.

Prevention for either heat exhaustion or worse heat stroke should include dressing for the weather in lightweight light colored clothing that covers as much as possible, drinking lots of fluids (avoiding alcohol and caffeine), watching your diet, and wearing sun screen.
