Safety First

We recently had a truck driver exit his vehicle and enter his pup in our load out area at one of quarries. Luckily our perceptive loader operator spotted him prior to dumping a load of stone on top of him. When questioned he gave the reason that he knew his lead would get loaded first so he had time to clean his pup out. This kind of activity is extremely dangerous and could result in a driver getting seriously injured or possibly killed if a load of stone were dumped on top of them because the loader operator wasn't aware a driver is present.

In our safety rules it clearly states:

Customer must remain in their vehicles or in a designated safe area while in load out area.

In addition to that we have updated and attached the below wording to our Vendor

Policy:

Truck Drivers must remain in their vehicles except when in a designated safe area while in load out area. For no reason should a driver enter the boxes of their vehicles or trailers while outside of a designated safe area. Any driver failing to adhere to this policy is subject to loading refusal on the part of Stoneco, immediate ejection from a Stoneco site, and a possible lifetime ban from our sites regardless of company affiliation.

This rule will impact the driver of the truck personally if they work for Company X and are terminated and go to work for Company Y, we would still refuse to load them.
